Select Wall Street Research Updates and Commentary

Teleperformance

Update from Credit Suisse, March 2020

We continue to reference TEP's profitable growth profile with its strong history of revenue growth (31 consecutive quarters of at least 5% LfL growth), its diversifying customer base and end-market exposure and its continuous margin expansion. Investments into cybersecurity and site expansions/new openings may present a near-term margin headwind but, in our view, future proofs the business's profitable growth profile. We stress test the business to the current market disruption through scenario analysis and in our core estimates believe organic growth will remain positive (+2.4%) in the challenging FY20.

Update from Citi, March 2020

We set our model towards the preliminary FY21 outlook for "flattish-to-down low single digits" revenue, which comes close to our double-digit headline revisions last week – we also combined elements of 2001 and 2009 in our thinking. Still like many, we internally and externally debate whether any recovery will be U, L, or even W-shaped with false starts. Rescue funding from policymakers is meaningful, but the "devil will be in the details." Visibility is a challenge, though we certainly appreciate PAYX providing a baseline to work with. Taking a simpler approach for now, we can better rely on the historical notion: PAYX has been best to buy (absolute and relative vs ADP) after a recession has been officially declared. We think investors should gain conviction on the trajectory before establishing comfort in the multiple – recall ADP traded at a discount to the market very briefly in June 2009.

Update from Cantor Fitzgerald, March 2020

We maintain our Overweight rating on Genpact following our virtual meetings with management. We expect BPO to get attention from the investment community in the current volatile market, as BPO tends to benefit from uncertain times as companies look for strategic partners to help in areas like cost cutting & digital initiatives. BPO capitalizes on low industry penetration rates and an expanding TAM, which drive steady, high visibility single-digit annual organic growth rates, which can be complemented by acquisitions. The demand environment for Genpact remains promising with a healthy pipeline having signed contracts with names like Cardinal Health, Walmart, Bridgewater, GE, & McKesson. We believe the risk/reward is in investors' favor. We encourage investors to look at the BPO names, which are reasonable multiple, beta names.

Update from Stifel, February 2020

TNET reports 4Q AMC 2/13. Despite macro/company specific headwinds, TNET has outperformed the Russell 2000 Growth by 300bp since its 3Q report. Some of that outperformance likely reflects insider 10b5-1 purchases by a PE sponsor/ board member, who bought 1.1mn shares in Oct/Nov (1.5% outstanding). Higher healthcare costs reported industrywide in 3Q seem to have persisted in 4Q. While these are backward looking statistics, they could result in more conservative guidance until better understood. We have run various potential 2020 scenarios; our analysis suggests a range of EBITDA roughly between $400-$415mn, up 4-8% y/y and we have adjusted our estimate to the midpoint of this range (consensus $412mn). This adjustment reflects a higher cost environment and is not a statement of how we expect management to guide, TNET trades at 10x 2020 EBITDA, we continue to like the risk/reward, particularly given the 20% discount to NSP, its closest comp.

Update from DNB Market, March 2020

We do not believe HMS Networks has experienced material order cancellations recently, and note capacity utilisation is gradually normalising towards 100% for its sub-suppliers in China. Still, we consider it likely that demand will wane in Q2 as customers (makers and users of industrial automation equipment) could struggle with supply chain disruption. In the past month, the company's Intesis brand (8% of 2019 sales) has closed one production plant in Barcelona (Spain) and we believe the biggest risk is an escalating coronavirus outbreak in Germany (comprising ~25% of group sales).
